This seminar covers the literature on political violence in the contemporary world. We will study the determinants, processes, and outcomes of civil war and other forms of conflict. Specific topics include ethnic violence, the role of natural resources and other economic factors, the intricate relationship between state building and violence, as well as various combat, pacification and conflict prevention strategies. In the weekly sessions, we discuss the state-of-the-art of the literature and identify theoretical, empirical, and methodological gaps that may inspire your own research. Over the course of the seminar, each student develops a research design presenting a convincing and feasible strategy to address an open research question. This design serves as the basis for the final term paper and, potentially, a MA thesis.

Requirements and Grading:

Students will have to fulfill the following requirements:

- Actively participate in the seminar sessions
- Read the required readings for each meeting in advance. In addition, we encourage you to consult the recommended readings and/or additional literature on topics you want to focus on in your memos and term paper.
- Write short memos on three of the ten weekly topics. The memos should actively challenge the week's readings, raise questions, and may already contain some research ideas. These memos are due on Monday evening of the week in which this topic is scheduled. Students need to be prepared to briefly present the main arguments of their memos in class to kick off our discussion.
- Prepare and present a research design (due in week 13) that outlines the research question, relevant literature, and empirical strategy for the research paper
- Discuss a research design of another student
- Write a research paper on a topic chosen in agreement with the instructors

The final grade will primarily depend on the term paper (70%). However, the written memos, research design, and class participation are also taken into consideration (30%).
